Dear Hank,

I want to thank you and Bill for the kind words of my most recent PAR. They were most appreciated. Looking over the PAR set me off on one of my periodic attempts to evaluate my assignment here in terms of worth to me and to the Agency, which is a simple process as regards me - far more difficult and complex as regards the Agency. There is no question that it has rewarded and benefited me greatly. The pleasant environment and the opportunity to pass on to bright young people some of the lessons of your experience is a hard combination to beat.

As for the Agency, I'm trying to make sure that it gets its full measure of payoff. If one thinks in terms of outreach and public relations with the students and the University community as a whole, I would give the arrangement high marks. I believe alot of students and staff have a far different and far more understanding view of the Agency as a result of their contact and conversations with a real, live CIA type. Last week provided a good example of this. Backed up by [redacted] from OP, I conducted the CIA part of a "Career Night" devoted to Government foreign affairs careers. About 70 young people showed up, and there was far more interest shown in CIA than in either State or NSA - who also participated. I gave people my office room number and invited them to come talk further - about a dozen people took me up on it and came to talk about the Agency in the days following the session. I even met with two people who aren't Georgetown types, but heard about my availability from friends. Presence on campus does have its advantages.

To what extent this kind of thing results in actual recruits only time will tell. I have planted alot of seeds since I have been here. Time will tell whether there is a harvest.

Following up on my talk with Bill this last Spring, I have signed a retirement application for December 31st. I assume that the CMO poeple will eventually be in touch about a contract to carry through until the end of the academic year.

Thanks again for the report.

Cheers,
